Gonna need a bigger pot.

(No worries, I'd no more cook a pet bunny than I would my pet chickens.)

I can't eat unpet bunny anymore. It feels like eating a cat.

I can understand that. When I was a teenager, we lived on an island in the South Pacific and we had a pet pig (gift to my sister from a chief on another island). The pig's name was Alexander and he was smarter than any dog I've ever owned. My sister cannot/will not eat pork.

I must admit that I sometimes have difficulty with chicken these days. I'll eat it at a restaurant, but I find that I really don't prepare it at home much anymore. My girls (Coco, Liz, Carmen, and 5) are just such strong personalities, and such a big part of my life, that it feels wrong to bring dead bird in the house.

I'm scared of that bunny. What if it's got long sharp pointy teeth?

All bunnies have long sharp pointy teeth. :) And that one could probably disembowel a man with its hind claws. (Small spotted bunnies are best.)

It does rather remind one of Bunnicula, yes?

I have to say, I'm rather glad that the bunny I saw on the trail yesterday was not that big.

Oh, it's lovely.

I was excited that there was video of the bunny! "Show me the bunny!" :^)

That's a ... large ... bunny.

Compared to the rabbits I've seen thus far, that one is a GIANT!

I showed that to my husband who promptly said "Have you met my friend Harvey?" I'm not sure how well a phouka would do as a pet, but he has a point.

Pookas are uppity. It's a scientific fact.

Thank you
